Msr pocket rocket 2 kit review

pot on top. We love stable arms on the MSR Pocket Rocket 2. SIMMER CONTROL GOOD - The pocket rocket gives you full control over your flame, so you have a range of cooking power from a slow cooker to a roaring boil. Whether you want a quick boil for a freeze-dried meal or a backcountment chef who likes to prepare DIY masterpieces in the hinterland, the Pocket Rocket is up to the task. The Pocket Rocket 2 is much more compact without its case. PORTER THE CAS IS A ENCOMBRANT PEU - While we like that the case of included hard transport for the pocket rocket increases durability and protects it from dirt, it makes the stove less compact. Unless you have a large enough pan, it is unlikely that you will be able to nest both a fuel can and the Pocket Rocket case inside. We usually leave the case at home when we are on the track and choose to carry it in a bag of little things instead. NOT GOOD WHAT THE CONDITIONS - The burner head on the pocket rocket is not recessed and there is no screen to help protect the flame from the wind like this on integrated stoves, such as the Jetboil Flash. We haven't had any real problems with performance in the wind, but you can switch to the Pocket Rocket Deluxe if that's a big concern for you. The Deluxe version is designed with a lip around the burner to help with efficiency in windy conditions. The Pocket Rocket 2 and Pocket Rocket Deluxe are both large stoves, but there are a couple of notable differences. The Deluxe version is about $25 more which gives you a push button lighter and a slightly wider burner head with a lip that helps it perform better in windy conditions. We generally prefer the standard pocket rocket 2 because we don't find the piezo lighters needed, and they are usually the first part to fail on a stove. We've never had a real problem using the standard version in the wind, but if higher efficiency and not having to manually turn on your stove is important to you, the Deluxe is also an excellent stove. The Pocket Rocket 2 is the stove we wear most often for backpacking trips because of its durability, great slow-cooked control, compact size, and stability. This is great value for money buy both for the first time backpack stove buyers and for those looking to upgrade their current configuration.
